Costume Contest

On October 31st we will be celebrating Halloween with our costume "contest." We will walk the catwalk and show off our costumes.

Come dressed as your favorite ghoulie or ghosty!

Comedy for Caregivers

While serving as a caregiver, many moments throughout the day arise that make us laugh. Sometimes our loved one says something so out of pocket that we laugh at the absurdity of it. Sometimes they are happy to joke around like it is the good ol' days. In between these moments of laughter, the skills that people use in improv comedy come in handy when dealing with the more difficult behaviors of our loved ones.

The guiding principle of improvisational comedy is "Yes, and..." When performing an improv scene, the comedians try their best not to disagree with the premise of the scene. So if one person says, "Why are you making a cake?" the other person shouldn't respond, "I'm not making a cake." Instead, it is the responsibility of everyone in the scene to work together to create something funny collaboratively. We can apply this same principle when caregiving. When your loved one says, "I want to go home." You can respond two ways: "What are you talking about?! We already are home," or "OK, but can you remind me where your home is?" The first response objects to the premise of the scene. It rejects their reality and tries to substitute your own. The second one meets your loved one "when" they are. They may be remembering a time when they lived in Missouri; they could be thinking about the time everyone went to visit their parents for someone's 50th birthday party; or they may even be thinking that they are tired and would like to lie down.

When your loved one says something or asks something that doesn't make any sense whatsoever, that should be your cue to engage with them where they are at that moment. So instead of objecting to premise of the scene, try, instead, to make it fun for both you and your loved one.

If you would like to learn more about this caregiving style from the experts, this month Andrea Baum, co-founder of Stomping Ground Comedy Theater, will be giving our support group a crash course in improv caregiving on October 28th.
